But you know your child best. If she is a social butterfly, stretching the number by two or three or four can be a good fit for her. Your introverts may be overwhelmed by the normal number of party friends. The main goal of the party is for the guest of honor to enjoy his big day! If it's a party, there has to be food! Work from your budget out. The girls are not going to scrutinize the menu, but they will be looking for food, telegraphs, Birthday! (Remember to have safe options for girls on limited diets.) Go traditionally with a decorated cake, or get a little adventurous and set up a food station. The girls can add decorations to cupcakes, toppings for ice cream cones or sundaes, or collect spicy treats like nachos or trail mix. Do you have room to set up a food station? Will you have to protect surfaces like carpet and upholstery? Is a food station in your party future? Party advantage treat bags are traditional, but there are other options, too. Give each girl a copy of a favorite paperback book or a small stuffed animal. Decorate t-shirts, socks, or tote bags, or braid friendship bracelets as a party activity and take-home favor combined. If you go for a bag of goodies, try letting the girls decorate plain paper bags and add favors from a favor bar. A houseful - or yardful, or parkful - of girls is a good start to a good time. Choose as many do-ahead ideas for your party as possible and you can enjoy it, too! For more party ideas, be sure to read our blog article on Girls birthday party themes. Themes.
